Background

The ANU's Japan Institute brings together the ANU's extensive range of Japan expertise across the disciplines, and provides a single window for members of the public interested in Japan-related academic and other activities at the ANU. It will also act as a focus for Australia-wide collaboration with universities and public institutions to promote knowledge of Japan. It will achieve this through an easily navigable website as the portal for accessing the Institute's current activities, and through an extensive email network which notifies interested people about upcoming Japan-related events or reports. Work of the Japan Institute is coordinated through a Steering Committee composed of Professor Kent Anderson, Director of Asian Studies; Professor Tessa Morris-Suzuki, Division of Pacific and Asian History; and Professor Jenny Corbett, Australia-Japan Research Centre.

The Japan Institute website is at: <http://japaninstitute.anu.edu.au/events.php>
